One of my cherished childhood memories is visiting the coast and the excitement and sense of exploration searching the rockpools for shorelife over the school summer holidays. You gradually become a local expert in knowing where to look, and seem to always be in awe and surprise of the different types of marine life you may see hidden amongst the seaweed, within the rockpools or in the nooks & crannies of our chalk rocky shore!

Traditional rockpooling is one of the best all-inclusive activities that all the able family can do together - and this exhibition gives an insight into what you may find exploring the Thanet coast for its fascinating marine and coastal wildlife. Thanet is part of the North East Kent Marine Protected Area.

This exhibition is organised by the Thanet Coast Project and its volunteer 'Coastal Wardens'. The volunteers run the series of outdoor educational 'Seashore Safaris' over the summer. Many thanks to Greg Bessant for taking the lead in filming and production, with support from a project team. The Thanet Coast project runs with support from public donations and grants.
